

Re: Fw: advisor

Subject: Re: Fw: advisor

From: "Anne Bothe" <abothe@uga.edu>

Date: Thu, 16 Aug 2007 09:03:44 -0400

To: "Kimberly Ballard-Washington" <kbwash@uga.edu>

[REDACTED]

The angry husband on the phone most definitely named Dr. Bender. He also said PhD. It would take me more sleuthing to figure out why [REDACTED]

I still have not answered [REDACTED] email -- Should I?

Anne

----- Original Message ----- From: "Kimberly Ballard-Washington" <kbwash@uga.edu>
To: "Anne Bothe" <abothe@uga.edu>
Sent: Wednesday, August 15, 2007 5:14 PM
Subject: Re: Fw: advisor

Anne:

Will you please check to see who [REDACTED] adviser is?
Kimberly

Anne Bothe wrote:

----- Original Message ----- From:
To: <abothe@uga.edu>
Sent: Wednesday, August 15, 2007 1:11 PM
Subject: advisor

Dear Dr. Bothe,

I write at the risk that what I'm writing is unnecessary or that what I'm writing might not be understood.

My husband [REDACTED] confided to me recently that he spoke to you about his view of my relationship with my advisor. If my husband did contact you, what do I do if my husband speaks from a viewpoint, a reality, different than mine? Should his view be taken more seriously than mine-when he was not "there" and has a viewpoint skewed by imagination, fear, and jealousy? If he did, indeed, call you, should I allow my former advisor to be put into jeopardy because of my husband's incorrect calculations?

My advisor was caring. He cared to talk with me about a breadth of my concerns. [REDACTED] solutions to my schooling if I should move away, etc. He became a cherished friend of mine. That I cherished the friendship too much became a problem for me, and that is why I talked about it with my husband.

That this advisor should be hurt because of my husband's discomfort with my feelings for this advisor, causes me great pain. Further complicating the situation, I do not want to be unsupportive of my husband.

Yet, how can I let this advisor suffer for the problems that I experienced with myself and, now, between my husband and me?

It is my fervent wish that nothing adverse happens to this advisor who dared to be-friend me. Please, ensure that nothing un-just will happen with the allegations set forth from my husband.

Thank you.

Pinpoint customers who are looking for what you sell.

--
Kimberly Ballard-Washington
Associate Director for Legal Affairs
University of Georgia
Office of Legal Affairs
Lustrat House
Athens, Georgia 30602-1693
Phone (706) 542-0006 Fax: (706) 542-3248 E-mail: kbwash@uga.edu